HOW ANTIOCH VOTED.

The Storm Responsible For a Rather Light Vote.

The vote in Antioch last Tuesday was somewhat disappointing to those who had counted upon a large vote being polled and is doubtless due to the fact that a severe snowstorm raged nearly all day and many of the voters living at a distance did not like to venture out in the face of the raging blizzard. By ten o'clock 200 votes were cast and it looked like a record breaker for the day, but about that time the storm set in with fury, and up to one o'clock only 50 additional votes were cast, the polls finally closing with 468 votes cast out of a possible 800. Following is the summary of the vote as cast, the state, legislative and county ticket being given as it appeared on the official ballot:

The Twentieth Century Magazine.

A new century brings new conditions and new methods of meeting them. Fifty years ago the average American was content to get his news once a week. Now he demands it twice a day, with relays hourly when things are happening in Africa and China.

The Curtis Publishing Company bought The Saturday Evening Post because it believed that the public which demands its newspaper twice a day, would want a popular literary magazine once a week, provided it adjusted itself to the new conditions and rightly gauged the demand of the twentieth century. And that demand, it felt, would be for a magazine of the best quality that money and brains could make, sold at as low a price as modern machinery and methods could produce it.

To improve the quality and at the same time lower the price of a publication, two things are necessary—a great circulation and the best machinery that human ingenuity can devise. The first has been achieved, for The Saturday Evening Post has now a weekly circulation of a quarter of a million, and new subscriptions are coming in at the rate of a thousand a day. Again, its ten new presses have just been installed in its new eight-story building, which, together with its old facilities give it the largest and most complete periodical plant in the world.

This addition to the equipment of The Curtis Publishing Company, with the auxiliary machinery specially designed for The Saturday Evening Post, the whole involving an outlay of half a million dollars, will enable it to lessen the mechanical cost of the magazine, and to print the edition of 600,000 weekly toward which it is rapidly growing. And this cheapening of cost and increase of circulation will permit the publishers to make permanent the price which, under old conditions, they were able to put out only as a special and limited offer—a year's subscription to The Saturday Evening Post, 52 numbers, including the regular monthly double numbers and the special holiday issues, for one dollar.

TO AVOID DROWNING.

It Is a Safe Rule to Turn Upon the Back.

A correspondent of the Jacksonville Metropolis says: A guest at my summer place, a few miles from Pablo, while bathing, was carried out to sea, and when almost out of sight, and all hope had fled, to our surprise we suddenly saw his body impelled forcibly toward us. Then we saw it recede a few feet, and then again, as it were, shoot twenty feet toward the shore. This continued until my son and myself at last able to reach him, bore him insensible to the beach. After recovery his story was that after losing all hope, guided by some mysterious impulse, he had turned upon his back, when he felt himself carried rapidly forward. He had been turned over upon his face to get his bearings, when he was carried out further from the land, and on again placing himself upon his back. The surface waves brought him rapidly to the shore, a rescued man. It is an error that the drowning man is attacked by cramp except in very cold weather. He drowns from heart failure, induced by the violent exertion and the upward pressure of the water upon the abdomen diminishing the space and impeding the action of the heart. By turning over on the back this pressure is removed, the back being almost entirely a strong wall of bone and muscle. Also when on the back, the entire body is nearer the surface and the surface waves tend toward the shore, the under-current out to sea, even the legs, when upon the back, being less exposed to the current that tends toward the sea. By floating gently upon the back the heart, relieved of its pressure, becomes calm and quiet, and the swimmer can regain his strength and float for hours. The bather, whose heart is weak should always present, when standing erect, the right side of the body to the waves, and thus avoid the Sullivan-like blows of the incoming waves upon a crippled heart. In every bathhouse should be posted the injunction: "In case of exhaustion or accident turn upon the back."

Pilot Boat Was Wrecked by a California Gray Whale.

The wreck of the pilot boat Bonita, on the night of July 20, off San Francisco Bay, was an incident, if not unparalleled in maritime annals sufficiently rare to make it worthy of record. The Bonita was one of the finest of her class, and since 1892 has been stationed off the Golden Gate, interrupting vessels bound for that difficult and fog-infested harbor.

On the night of the wreck the officers and crew, with the exception of the man at the wheel, were just at supper. The fog was so dense that objects at a cable length away were invisible. Suddenly a shock of sufficient violence to knock the men off their seats was felt throughout the ship. Supposing that a collision had occurred, the crew rushed to the deck, but no other vessel was in sight. Sounding the pumps it was discovered that the Bonita was sinking, and at the same time one of those enormous gray whales loomed up on the side of the craft and disclosed the cause of the accident. The Bonita remained afloat long enough to allow the crew time to secure their effects and launch their boats. They were subsequently picked up by incoming vessels. The wreck occurred about six miles southeast of the Farallones, and now lies in six fathoms depth of water. She may be raised, though the operation will be difficult on account of the strong currents at this point. The California gray whale is the largest of the species, and is seen on the California coast from November until May. Its favorite haunt seems to be at the entrance of San Francisco bay, where it is observed often in large numbers. One caught in this vicinity forty years ago measured ninety-seven feet in length. Their weight is prodigious. Their scientific designation is Sibbaldius salfureus. The Bonita was built in 1892 and was of seventy-five tons register. Her dimensions were eighty-eight feet over all, twenty-three feet breadth, and 9.3 depth. Her crew numbered five. Four pilots were aboard when the wreck occurred.

Rare Changes.

Throughout the entire grain belt of the west farmers are seeking wives. The demand is greatest in Kansas, where the crops have been even larger than elsewhere. The average farmer who is seeking a wife wants one of rather mature years, and widows usually have the preference. Good cooks are in demand, and shop girls moderately so. Seamstresses are seldom asked for, and a good disposition along with a willingness to work, are among the requirements.—New York Tribune.

THE TEXAS CRUISER

—BY—
T. BURLINGAME ROSS

CHAPTER I.

Within one of the southern lagoons upon the coast of Texas, is the small bay of Gollad. It is not far from the mouth of the Nueces, and, like most of the lagoons which abound upon the shores of the Gulf, affords a most excellent harbor. In the early part of August, 1846, a small schooner lay at anchor within this bay. She was a pretty craft; built after the model of our Baltimore clippers, and carrying a wide spread of canvas for such a hull. She had a square topsail and topgallant sail upon the fore, and a gaff-top-sail upon the main. She was called the Lone Star, and had for some years belonged to the Texas navy, having been employed in cruising after, and capturing vessels that had been fitted out for the especial purpose of committing depredations upon the seaport settlements of the infant republic. And even now that Texas had been united with its gigantic sister, it was found necessary to keep the Lone Star in service, for manifold were the robberies still committed by the Mexican craft, and none knew their haunts so well as did the commander of the gallant schooner.

She carried six brass guns, and the plies that stood in their brackets above the masts were bright and sharp. Upon the quarter-deck, with one hand held of a back-stay, stood a young man, not over five-and-twenty, whose uniform marked him as the captain of the vessel. He was tall, with brown hair, and a rich, dark gray eye, and possessing one of those peculiar conformations of form and feature which at once mark out the commander. His face was one of more than ordinary manly beauty, and its tone of nobleness and authority was well sustained by the physical power which was at once apparent in the muscular massiveness and compactness of his frame. His name was Clarence Howard. He was a Virginian by birth, and having lost his parents when quite young, he adopted the sea as the field of his labor. He was but a boy in years when the struggles of Texas to free herself from the Mexican yoke attracted his attention, and in company with a party of his friends he started for the scene of action; and from that time he did his part well and truly toward establishing the republic.

Close by the captain stood a small boy. He was not over fifteen, and even small at that. In frame he was very slight. His light flaxen hair was thin and wavy, and seemed to have his long, projecting brow almost with the appearance of baldness upon the top. His eyes, light gray in color, were different from most eyes. The pupils were long and cone-like, square at the base, and reaching to a point at their upper termination. In addition to this, they were bright, sometimes sparkling like stars, and then at others, burning like fire; and, moreover, they seemed to possess a phosphorescent power, for in the dark they would often burn or glow, with a brightness which rendered them visible when the face could not be seen. This boy's name was Peter Sythe. Clarence Howard had found him, ten years before, when the first came to Texas on a wreck which had been cast up on the shore of Galveston, just north of the Rio Grande, and since that time he had clung to his noble protector, with all the affection of a child for its parent.

The two lieutenants were pacing the quarter deck upon the larboard side. The first was Karl Lottan, a stout, powerful, bull-man, some thirty years of age, a native of New York, though of German descent. The second was Martin Hart, another robust man, with black hair and black eyes, and some four or five years older than Lottan.

"Peter," spoke the captain, turning to his boy, "go and tell the coxswain to have my gig manned."

"Going ashore, captain?" asked Lottan, stepping over.

"Yes," returned Howard.

"Have you made up your mind yet when you'll sail?"

"Not quite, Lottan. But I shall sail for the first thing that turns up. We are doing no good here. Taylor and Worth have about all the supplies they can afford to wait for, and I understand that they are soon to start up into the country further. They mean to make their next attack upon Monterey. I think we'll poke along down to the southward, and we may get upon the track of that villain, Jilok Tudel—the most notorious pirate in Mexico ever produced. By the cross, Karl, I'd like to meet that chap."

"So would we all," returned the lieutenant, enthusiastically.

"And then there's more work, too," resumed the captain. "The Mexican government has given out a lot of letters of marque; so you see, the gulf'll be swarming with privateers."

"But won't the United States grant any such letters?"

"No—I guess not."

"But why? Good gracious, if Mexico sends out her privateers, why shouldn't we have some to offset them?"

"I don't know, Karl. It isn't a very honorable mode of warfare; but you see, Mexico's got no navy at all, and so she's obliged to do this. She's got one or two little scows, but they're good for nothing."

"Then they need privateers?"

"To be sure they do; and if they'd only raise their own men, I wouldn't care; but they've sent a lot of letters of marque to Havana, in hopes that the Cubans will fit out privateers against us; and we have the best of reasons for believing that privateers are being fitted out in England to cruise under the Mexican flag. What d'ye think of that?"

"Why—I'll tell ye, captain. I'm very glad we hold our commission regularly; and I only hope we may meet an Englishman cruising under the Mexican flag. It kind o' strikes me now that I should rather let a real Mexican pirate go free than to let off them as ought to be in better business. However, we may find one of 'em, eh?"

"I hope so," was Howard's reply, as he turned toward his cabin.

He then went below, and when he returned to the deck he was all ready for going on shore. His boat's sword was buckled on, and a brace of six-barreled pistols graced his belt. Even the shore of Texas, along the banks of the Nueces, was not without danger to the American.

The captain gave the order for pushing off. There were some dozen huts scattered about upon the shore, one of which, larger than the rest, was occupied by a man named Gould, who was an old trapper and hunter. Howard left his boat and crew at the shore, and with Peter as a companion, he went up to Gould's hut, and found the owner within.

"Ah, captain—still here, eh?" uttered the old trapper, as he grasped Howard by the hand.

"Yes, my old friend," returned the young man. "I'm here for a while. But I came up now to see if you had heard from the west'rd."

"Yes, captain—I'm just from Santa Fe. The brave Fremont has joined Commodore Sloat, and just as I was startin' the news came in by an Indian runner a horseback that Montgomery had taken San Francisco."

"Do you think it's true?"

"Of course 'tis. And now what's been done here? Where's old Zachary?"

"Oh, he's right sird, ye, you may rest assured. He has captured everything that came in his way, and he's bound for Monterey."

"Why, I tell ye, cap'n, 'tain't no sort o' use for them 'tarnal Mexicans to think o' beatin' us. Just as sure as I'm alive, three thousand true-blue Yankees with old Zachary at their head 'ud march right through the very heart o' Mexico."

If Jim Gould had a weakness beyond his hatred of the Mexicans, it was his ardent respect for Gen. Taylor; and he had often been heard to remark that there wa'n't but one Zachary Taylor, 'cause there wa'n't room but for one. Howard smiled at the old trapper's earnestness, and having learned all that he had come to learn, he arose to take his leave. He had already put on his cap and turned toward the door when the old man stopped him.

"Look here, cap'n," he cried, in an earnest tone. "Have ye been to Vera Cruz since I've been gone?"

"No, I've been cruising about the gulf some, but haven't stopped there. But why do you ask?"

"Why—p'raps ye'll say it's none o' my business—but I guess I'll run the risk. Ye know one Antonio St. Marc?"

"Of course," uttered Clarence, changing color. "And what of him?"

"Ye know that gal o' his'n, too, I take it?"

"Don't bother me, Gould. You mean Donna Irene?"

"Yes, I do. And ha'n't ye heard nothing 'bout her?"

"No—not a word. But what is it?"

"Well—to tell ye the truth, cap'n," returned the old man, with some show of embarrassment, "I don't exactly know myself. There was an old woman came with us from Bekar, and left us this mornin'."

"She was inquiring for you, and said she had come from Vera Cruz. She seemed to be lookin' here—right down the hill; that's the woman you, as sure as fate. Don't you see her?"

"Is that the one?—that old, bent-up woman?"

"Yes. Just as likely as not she's huntin' for ye now."

"You say she's come from Vera Cruz?"

"So she said. But see—she's going down to your boat."

Without speaking further the captain beckoned to his boy, and then started from the trapper's hut.

CHAPTER II.

Clarence Howard hastened down to the water's edge, and arrived there just as the old woman was inquiring for the captain of the schooner. She appeared to be somewhere between fifty and sixty years of age; quite small in frame, and much bent. She seemed to be an Indian woman, though she spoke both Spanish and English well. Her hair was long and matted, and very black, with here and there a silver lock; her eyes were black, large and burned with a strange fire. Her garb was very simple, consisting of the colored blanket and skirt usually worn by those Indians who had lived in the neighborhood of civilization. Take her all in all, she was a curiosity of humanity.

"Have you been searching for me, my good woman?" asked Clarence.

The woman started when she heard the voice, and having made sure who it was that had spoken to her, she asked:

"Are you the captain?"

"Of this schooner—yes."

"And is your name Clarence Howard?"

"It is."

"I would like to speak with you a moment, good sir," she said.

"For what?" asked Howard.

"Come with me a short distance away, and I'll tell you."

"But why not speak here?"

"I would speak with you concerning Donna Irene St. Marc," the woman whispered, in a tone so low that only Howard could hear it.

"Lead on," returned Clarence quickly.

Slowly the woman hobbled away towards the nearest hut, and as soon as she was beyond the hearing of the boatmen, she turned and motioned for her companion to stop.

"Now, senior captain, you must listen. You say you know Donna Irene St. Marc; and she has told me that she knows you."

"She? Irene?—then you have seen her?" cried Clarence.

"Yes—I have seen her within three weeks; and she tells me that you are her best friend."

"Did she tell you that?" uttered the young captain, ardently. "O, she has no truer friend—none truer than I."

"And I think the maiden loves thee, Senior Americano."

"Did she tell thee so?" asked Clarence, in a quick, breathless whisper.

"Not in so many words, but then there be other languages than the one the mouth speaks. She called thy name, senior; and while she spoke that name with her lips, she told me her love with her eyes."

"I hoped I had her gratitude, but her love was more than I had dared to hope for."

"Ah, thine own eye gives the denial of that, senior."

"No, no, woman. I may have prayed that she might love me, but hope would imply more than was mine. So fair—so lovely—so wealthy—so noble! Ah, I had not dared so high."

"Verily, I'll give thee all the best I have. And now to my business. In all Vera Cruz poor Irene has not a friend. A terrible fate awaits her, and there is none nigh to avert the blow."

"How! A blow?—a terrible fate? Speak, woman. What is it you mean?"

"Listen, senior. You have heard of one Jilok Tudel?"

"I know but one of that name."

"And he?"

"Is a pirate."

"Yes—the very one. And now St. Marc swears his child shall marry that dreadful man!"

For some moments Howard gazed into the woman's face without speaking. The sun had sunk from sight, and the twilight features were now indistinct beneath the long, matted hair, but those two large black eyes gleamed out with undimmed power, for she seemed deeply moved.

"Did I understand you?" the young man asked, at length.

"Yes, senior captain. Antonio St. Marc would marry his child to the pirate Tudel."

"Ah—he does not know who this Jilok Tudel is?"

"He knows him far better than you can, senior."

"And knowing him to be the wicked, bloody pirate, would he still—"

"Force his sweet child to marry him, senior. You may as well speak it out, for so the truth is."

"But St. Marc is a monster!"

"He is, senior."

Clarence Howard gazed fixedly in the woman's face. There was truth in her tone, and a stern purpose of honest intent in her look. He knew but little of St. Marc. Four years before, while cruising off the northern coast of Yucatan, he had fallen in with a Cuban pirate. It was his first cruise as master of a vessel. The pirate tried to run round Cape Catoche, but the Lone Star cut her out, and captured her after a smart engagement of fifteen minutes. On board this pirate the young captain found a wealthy Mexican and his daughter. The former introduced himself as a Castilian gentleman, of Vera Cruz, and had been captured by the pirates while on his way, with his child, to visit some friends in Havana.

His child was then fifteen years of age, and so beautiful that even then Clarence almost wished he had never seen her. He delivered the pirates up to justice, and conveyed St. Marc and his child back to Vera Cruz. He remained with them two days at that time, at their sumptuous dwelling, and he had visited them since. He knew that St. Marc had been rather cool and distant at his last visit, and he attributed it to the fact that the wealthy Hidalgo wanted him not for a son-in-law. He had regarded the man as a dark, stern parent, and an unfeeling aristocrat, but he had not thought him capable of such blackness of heart as this intelligence would seem to indicate.

"Woman," he said, slowly and sternly, "mark me. Jilok Tudel is a blood-stained pirate. Do you know of another Jilok Tudel?"

"I do not, senior," the woman answered.

"But do you know this one—the pirate?"

"I do, senior—very well. Antonio St. Marc has sworn that his child shall marry this wicked man. Now so you see, but be sure St. Marc says no. You must see Donna Irene."

"I should like to see her, but I cannot enter Vera Cruz openly now. You must remember that our country is at war with Mexico."

"I know," returned the woman. "But that must not prevent you. I tell thee Irene is in danger, and she looks to thee to save her. She loves thee with a woman's heart and soul. In disguise, thou canst enter the city. None need know that you are of the enemy. Speak, now, and tell me—wilt thou go?"

"First tell me who and what thou art," Clarence said, after some moments' hesitation.

"I am called Calypso. Some call me Calypso, the Wanderer; and they are not far out of the way; for surely none wander more than I. I am the Homeless Wanderer—almost—Friendless."

"But what is Donna Irene to you?"

"What is she to you?" Calypso asked, with a smile.

"I understand what you mean," the captain answered. "But I knew not but that she might be some—"

"Perhaps you were going to say relative."

"I will not say that the thought did not enter my mind, for under the excitement of your story I forgot the color of your skin. However, you must be something to her, or you would not have come so far."

"Ah, senior, it matters little to me which way I go. I may as well wander hither as to wander thither—as well to Texas as to California."

"And have you ever wandered off so far?"

"As California?"

"Yes."

"Yes, senior. I move hither and thither continually. But enough of this. Thou wilt not fail to visit Vera Cruz, and see Donna Irene. Once more I tell thee, thou alone canst help her."

"But—pardon me—that is very strange. Are there not in Mexico those who love her?"

"Yes, many. But, alas, not one upon whom thou wert of the factor does not operate more powerfully than does the love of the child."

"Add wilt Donna Irene expect me?"

"She will hope for your coming, for she bade me tell thee so."

"Then most assuredly I shall go."

"But remember—let your disguise be perfect, for be sure that Antonio St. Marc will not spare thee if he detects him."

"I will be careful of that, madam."

"One thing more," resumed the woman, "she bade me tell you, if you came, that she would recognize you by your whistling the first bar of 'Paciencia y barajar,' then passing on to the third, and from that to the fifth bar."

"But did she tell you what answer she would return to my signal?"

"O, yes. I had forgotten, senior. Yes, she said she would sing the second, fourth, and sixth strains of the same tune."

"One thing more, good woman. What I wish to ask is, if Jilok Tudel is now in Vera Cruz—or if he was when you were there?"

"No, senior, he was at sea, and St. Marc has assured Irene that she must be his wife when he returns. And now, farewell. We shall meet again if we both live."

With these words the woman turned away, and was soon lost to sight in the gloom; and long after she was gone did Howard stand and gaze after her.

"Captain," spoke the boy, laying his hand lightly upon his commander's arm, "there's a boat just come up from Matamoros, with a message for you."

There Are No More Self-Made Men.

"From the highest home to the lowest in America this idea of caste has entered, destroying our old, high ideals and making us pretentious and vulgar," writes "An American Mother," of "How We Can Lead a Simple Life," in the Ladies' Home Journal.

"The idle rich man covets high social place with a hunger that is both ridiculous and tragic. If he has money enough he buys a titled husband for his daughter. He tries to establish a precedence for himself over his neighbors by claims of high descent. Nor is this appreciation of rank confined to the leisure class in this country. It is universal. No candidate for office finds it necessary now to pose as a self-made man or to put his respectable ancestors out of sight."

The self-made man is no longer the popular hero. On the contrary, noble ancestors are in such demand that if we do not have them we invent them as we do air-brakes or motors, or anything else necessary to our well-being and comfort. The rich American finds it as easy to have a coat-of-arms and a pedigree as to have a dress-coat. He seldom goes to Burke or the Herald's College for these things. He plants and grows his own family tree as he does his maple at the front door."

"Ah, Count, is it you?" said the millionaire, as he rose and extended his hand. "I hope I see you well?"

"Yes; you love my Katharine?"

"And I would marry her."

"I expect you would. Much much rhino have you got, Count?"

"Rhino! Ze rhino?"

"Money, greenbacks, cash. How much can you settle on my daughter?"

"But zhat is mercenary. I do not speak of money wif my loaf. I loaf her all my life, but I settle no money."

"Then we may consider you out of it and my coachman in. He can settle $1,000 on the girl and will continue to drive for me at half wages. 'Scuse me, Count, but this is my busy day."

"Then my title and my loaf was scorned?"

"You've hit it."

"And a coachman—"

Chinese Language Is Logical.

Every word in the Chinese language has a logical reason for its existence and peculiar formation, and each word consists of either one individual character or a number of them combined in order to make a complete word. Take the word field, a square divided into sections or lots. When the word man is written by the word field the combination makes the word farmer, indicating the avocation of a man who is associated with fields and agriculture. Still more suggestive is the Chinese word for truth, sincerity, faithfulness, honesty. It is formed by the combination of a man and word, thus expressing that that one form of honesty consists in a man standing by his word. The word for box is indicated by a square having four sides of equal length, while a prisoner is literally a man in a box, a fact which is often grossly illustrated in China when a criminal is sentenced to death, and is carried to the place of execution in a square box.—Ladies' Home Journal.

Hard and Soft Water.

All cooks do not understand the different effects produced by hard and soft water in cooking meat and vegetables. Peas and beans cooked in hard water containing lime and gypsum will not boil tender, because these substances harden vegetable casings. Many vegetables, as onions, boil nearly tasteless in soft water, because all the flavor is boiled out. The addition of salt often checks this, as in the case of onions, causing the vegetables to retain the peculiar flavoring principles, besides such nutritious matter as might be lost in soft water.

Deserting Porridge for Tea.

Statistics show that Scotland as a nation grows madder year by year, and the local government report now bluntly tells us that our unparliamentary desertion of porridge is one of the principal causes. Matters have, indeed, come to a sad pass when Scotland, whose stalwart sons have advertised by their appearance the virtues of porridge in all parts of the globe, is now stigmatized in a government report as a nation of intemperate tea drinkers.—Glasgow News.

The Tattooed Crucifix.

For the first time since we had been on the march the Filipino lieutenant separated his camp from ours. He also doubled his guard, stationing his soldiers in the rocks which surrounded us. Thinking all this somewhat peculiar, I sent one of the men to ask if he had placed the guards for our protection.

"No," was his laconic answer. Soon afterward he came himself to our camp, and through an interpreter calmly informed me that he had orders, presumably from General Tingo, to execute us in the mountains.

I have always believed that the lieutenant's refusal to obey orders and execute us was due to the effect produced in his mind by an incident which had occurred a night or two earlier. At one of our stops he had shown me a crucifix, which he wore hung by a ribbon around his neck, and said to me: "The Americans are not Christians."

"Oh, yes," I replied. "All the Americans are Christians."

"But you never wear any crucifixes."

I opened my jacket and showed him my breast. A crucifix had been tattooed there years ago, when I was a midshipman. The Tagal leaped to his feet with an exclamation of surprise. He instantly crossed himself. His eyes nearly started out of his head. I explained to him that any one could buy a crucifix and hang it around his neck, but that I had endured pain to have my crucifix pricked in the flesh, and that, as he could see, it must always be with me. There was a marked change in his manner toward me after that—Lieutenant Commander Gillmore, in McClure's.

SUMMING UP THE RESULT.

Naturally The News feels elated over the result of Tuesday's election, and, in our own feeble way, contributed our mite in bringing about the result, believing then, and still believing, that the election of Mr. McKinley would be productive of the most good to the common people of America, of whom we are happy to be a part.

Of whatever failings or faults we may stand indicted in the tribunal of public opinion, our worst enemy will hardly accuse The News or its management of demagogism or lack of sufficient backbone to stand up and advocate any principle we believed in, in the face of overwhelming odds, and could we have found it in the logical conclusions of our reasoning that it were better for you and for me of the common people, universally speaking, to have elected Mr. Bryan, we would have advocated his election, even were the odds in this, our native town, 18 to 1 against us. A wise man or a fool may argue that it is not the part of wisdom to stand out against the adverse opinion of the multitude, and generally speaking, this may be true, but the man or woman, who, in the face of overwhelming odds will stand out for a principle as he or she sees and believes to be true, commands our respect and admiration, even though we question their judgment. We are free to say however, that many men whose judgment, perhaps, transcended our own, saw fit to differ with us on the issues of the campaign, and to all such we are willing to ascribe the same honesty and candor we hold for ourselves. As neighbors, and, we trust, as friends, we shall meet in the everyday intercourse of life, each rejoicing in the prosperity of the other, and at all times ready to assist the other should the hour of adversity come.

As to ourselves we expect to ask nothing from the county, state or national government other than the opportunity to earn an honest dollar that will pay in the markets of the world one hundred cents of our honest debts and duties. An opportunity, as we believe, will be given all men under the tried, true and unchanged financial policy of the republican party, under the broad statesmanship, loyalty and patriotism of William McKinley.

Confident by the experiences of the past, that should the occasion arise, both democrat and republican, and all other parties, by what ever name they are known, will mingle their life blood in defense of the flag and follow it to the utmost islands of the seas, and believing that when the heat of this most remarkable campaign has blown away, the cool, deliberate judgment of democrat and republican alike will applaud the sentiment, "The American Flag where once planted, Must Never Come Down." With this patriotic thought to inspire us, and with faith in the wisdom of McKinley and a republican congress to work out the correct solution of every problem, we ring down the curtain of politics, secure in the belief that the country is safe.

Idaho Looks Like a Bryan State in Latest Advances.

Both Parties Are Claiming Nebraska—Illinois Legislative Situation Is Somewhat Disputed—General Election News.

New York, Nov. 8.—J. H. Manley, vice chairman of the Republican national committee, said last night that McKinley would have 305 electoral votes; that he has carried every northern state with the exception of Montana, Nevada and Colorado; and that he has carried four southern states—Kentucky, Maryland, Delaware and West Virginia. Manley said there would be twenty-five additional Republican members of congress to the present number, and six additional senators, with a loss of one in Colorado, making a net gain of five.

Situation as to the Senate.

A Washington dispatch says: "The next senate, assuming that the state legislatures will fulfill their duty and choose senators to represent their states, will stand, on the basis of Tuesday's election, 49 Republicans, 31 Democrats and 7 Independents with three legislatures in doubt. The legislatures in doubt are Delaware and Nebraska, in each of which state two senators are to be chosen, and Idaho, with one senatorial chair to be filled. Among those classed in the Independent column in the table below are Senators Stewart, of Nevada, and Kyle, of South Dakota, who in the last congress acted with the Republicans on all party matters; Turner of Washington, and Harris of Kansas, who acted with the Democrats, and Wellington of Maryland.

BOTH PARTIES ARE CLAIMING

Nebraska Continues To Be Fighting Ground—Claims in Detail.

Omaha, Nov. 8.—Election returns in Nebraska are so close as to be watched keenly. Chairman Lindsey, of the Republicans, claims that McKinley carries the state by 7,000 or more, the Republican state ticket by 5,000 to 7,000, and a majority of seventeen in the legislature. They claim re-election of Mercer and Burket for congress and election of Pope, Morland, and, possibly, of Hays.

Against this the Democrats claim that Bryan has carried the state, though by a narrow margin of perhaps not over a thousand; that a fusion has a safe working majority in the legislature; that fusion state officers are elected by 8,000 to 5,000, and, conceding re-election of Mercer and Burket; that fusion has pulled through Robinson, Stark, Shallenberger and Neville. The latter is the only representative conceded by the Republicans.

Indications are that the legislature will be fusion by a small majority. The World-Herald (Dem.) says: "The legislature of Nebraska is fusion by 72 votes out of 123 on joint ballot. In the senate there will be 14 Republicans and 10 Fusionists, in the house there will be 47 Republicans and 53 Fusionists."

Lincoln, Neb., Nov. 8.—Returns received at Poplar state headquarters at 9 p. m. from twenty-five counties complete and 300 scattering precincts indicate that Governor Poynter's plurality will be about 4,000 with the balance of the state ticket running close up with him. The election of the Bryan electors is claimed by a plurality of 2,000.

AVERAGES 30,000 PLURALITY.

Republican Claim in the Hoosier State—Representatives in Congress.

Indianapolis, Nov. 8.—A plurality of anywhere from 28,000 to 32,000 for the Republican national ticket, the election of Colonel W. T. Durbin (Rep.) to the governorship, the election of the entire state and Marion county Republican ticket, with nine, and perhaps ten, out of thirteen representatives, and the election of a legislature that will have a Republican majority of 40 on joint ballot, is a summary in brief of Tuesday's battle at the polls in Indiana. An unexpected development is the fact that the Republicans made their heaviest gains in Democratic strongholds. In seven of the strongly Democratic counties, McKinley and the state ticket showed a greater ratio of gain than was shown by the figures from several strong Republican counties.

Indiana's contingent in congress will be as follows: First district, James A. Hemenway (Rep.); Second, Robert W. Myers (Dem.); Third, W. T. Zenger (Dem.); Fourth, Francis M. Griffith (Dem.); Fifth, Elias S. Holloway (Rep.); Sixth, James E. Watson (Rep.); Seventh, Jesse Overstreet (Rep.); Eighth, C. W. Cromer (Rep.); Ninth, C. B. Landis (Rep.); Tenth, Edgar Orumpecker (Rep.); Eleventh, George W. Steele (Rep.); Twelfth, James Robinson (Dem.); Thirteenth, A. L. Brick (Rep.).

SAYS IT'S 100,000 IN WISCONSIN.

But the Election Is Over in That State and La Follette the Center of Interest.

Milwaukee, Nov. 8.—Everything took on its normal condition yesterday, and there were no signs that an election had been held. Complete figures of the Republican victory in Wisconsin will not be known for several days, many of the precincts are far distant from railway stations and will be sent in by mail. General Bryant, chairman of the Republican state central committee, yesterday reduced his claims of plurality, slightly from those given out Tuesday night, placing his latest estimates at 100,000 for both national and state tickets.

Chairman Warden, of the Democratic state committee, was at his office attending to the winding up of the state ticket, which he expects to do before the end of the week. Speaking of the result in the state, he said the great majority were a surprise to everybody—Republicans no less than Democrats.

Interest now centers in the appointments which will be made by Governor La Follette. Returns from seven non-elect Robert M. La Follette. But few changes are likely to be made by the new governor and no changes are talked of in the offices of the other state officers.

LOOKS LIKE BRYAN AND BECKHAM

Returns from Kentucky Have the Look of Democratic Success.

Cincinnati, Nov. 8.—A Western Union bulletin issued last night about Kentucky says: "Returns from seventy-five counties complete or nearly complete, embracing 1,216 precincts out of a total of 1,877 precincts in the state, give Bryan 154,030; McKinley, 138,877. Of the forty-four counties not yet heard from, or reported so sparsely as to be unintelligible, sixteen gave in the last presidential election 7,248 Democratic plurality and twenty-six gave 10,627 Republican plurality."

Louisville, Nov. 8.—The Courier-Journal with returns from 1,700 out of 1,884 precincts in Kentucky, puts Bryan's majority at 8,000 and Beckham's for governor, at 4,000. The remaining precincts are for the most part Democratic and are expected to increase the majorities of Bryan and Beckham.

MAYBURY AHEAD OF HIS TICKET.

But Michigan Gives McKinley More Than 90,000 Plurality.

Detroit, Mich., Nov. 8.—Returns from the state up to the present writing give President McKinley a plurality of 90,888 and Colonel A. T. Bliss, the Republican candidate for governor, (9,350. Colonel Bliss is running about 20,000 behind his ticket and Mayor Maybury, the Democratic gubernatorial candidate, is a corresponding number ahead of his ticket.

In 1892 McKinley's plurality in Michigan was 69,170. Governor Plagge ran 20,000 ahead of the Republican ticket that year, getting a plurality of 75,107. The Republicans have increased their majority in the legislature on joint ballot by seven. The Democrats have elected none of their senatorial candidates and only eleven out of 100 representatives in the lower house. Senator James McMillan's re-election by the next legislature is a certainty.

The entire Michigan congressional delegation is Republican by largely increased majorities in most of the districts. In Western Michigan, where it was expected the Republicans would suffer by reason of the loss of the Dutch vote, they have increased their majorities instead of losing. The constitutional amendment permitting the taxation of railroads and other corporations on the cash value of their property has carried by a large majority.

WHERE ILLINOIS IS INTERESTED.

Legislature Claimed as Perhaps Democratic—Republicans Confident.

Chicago, Nov. 8.—Returns received from the state at large do not materially alter the political complexion of the next state legislature. The probability is that the Republicans will have a majority of about 22 on joint ballot, which means a Republican successor to Senator Cullom. It is impossible at this time to give figures with strong assurance of accuracy, but the next Illinois legislature will probably be about as follows: Senate—Republicans, 34; Democrats, 17. House—Republicans, 70; Democrats, 74. The present house is Republican by 10, and the hold-over senators give a Republican majority of 8 in the senate.

The Democrats figure that with but slight gains they will be able to have a majority of one or two on joint ballot and thus replace Senator Cullom with a Democrat. In the event of their obtaining the control of the legislature it is certain that Samuel Aleschuer, the defeated Democratic gubernatorial candidate, will be sent to the senate. The Republicans, however, claim that there is not the slightest doubt of their having control of the legislature.

Complete returns in the Sixth congressional district re-elect Henry S. Boutell by a plurality of 590. Out of the seven congressmen in Chicago the Democrats have elected four—Feely in the Second, Foster in the Third, McAndrews in the Fourth and Mahony in the Fifth. The Republicans have elected Mann in the First, Boutell in the Sixth and Foss in the Seventh.

McKinley's plurality will perhaps reach 100,000, and that of Yates 70,000. McKinley's plurality in Chicago was 7,734; in Cook county perhaps 25,000.

The Republicans have elected 12 representatives for congress in Illinois, the Democrats 10.

Bryan Probably Gets Idaho.

Boise, Ida., Nov. 8.—Returns from Nez Perces and Latah counties yesterday show that the contest here will be held up to the former Republican majorities. This makes a radical change, and it is probable that the state has gone for Bryan and the Democratic state ticket, though Morrison, Rep., for congress, may pull through. The Republican state committee claim forty members of the legislature, a majority of ten on joint ballot, but there is much uncertainty yet on this point.

Iowa Sets a New Mark.

Des Moines, Nov. 8.—Semi-official returns from eighty-six of the ninety-nine counties in the state give the Republicans 268,000 votes; Democrats, 178,548; Republican plurality, 87,418, or an average of 1,000 Republicans to the county. The other thirteen counties at the same ratio will increase the Republican plurality to slightly more than 100,000, which is the high-water mark in the state's history. Every Republican candidate for congress is elected.

Claim on the Lower House.

Washington, Nov. 8.—Representative Lonsdale, who is in charge of the eastern headquarters of the Republican congressional committee, said last night that his returns and the press dispatches indicated that the Republicans would have 203 members in the next house of representatives, against 164 for the opposition. Kerr, for the Democratic committee, claims at least 168 members.

Elects McKinley and Wells.

Salt Lake City, Nov. 8.—Returns are in from about three-quarters of the precincts in the state. McKinley's majority is 4,500; Wells (Rep.) for governor, has a majority of 2,000, and Sutherland (Rep.) for congress, leads King by 1,000 majority. The Republicans have a majority of 11 on joint ballot in the legislature.

Montana in the Bryan Line.

Helena, Mont., Nov. 8.—Fuller returns in this state show that Bryan's plurality will be from 15,000 to 18,000, and that Governor Toole leads the Democrats in the state ticket with 9,000 to 8,000 votes to spare. The legislature, which will elect two United States senators is Democratic from fifteen to twenty.

McKinley Has 10,000 in Washington.

Portland, Or., Nov. 8.—About one-half of the total vote of the state of Washington has been reported and shows the following results: McKinley, 27,481; Bryan, 20,051. The vote on governor is very close. McKinley's majority in the state will be close to 10,000.

Missouri 40,000 for Bryan.

St. Louis, Nov. 8.—Chairman Selbert, of the Democratic state committee, stated yesterday that reports in his possession indicated that the Democrats had carried Missouri by 40,000 and elected thirteen out of fifteen congressmen.

North Dakota's Plurality.

Fargo, N. D., Nov. 8.—McKinley carries the state by 12,000 in all probability. The Democrats have made some little gains in the legislature, but both branches are Republican.

And All the Returns Not In.

Sioux Falls, S. D., Nov. 8.—Eight hundred and forty-one precincts out of a total of 1,150 in South Dakota give McKinley a plurality of 14,144.

Northern Wisconsin Railroad Lands

are increasing in value from year to year. Railroads are the great civilizers, for they give the settler as well as the manufacturer equal opportunity to work in undeveloped lands, thereby rapidly settling the country and bringing forth its undiscovered riches. Northern Wisconsin is rich in iron ore, clay, kaolin, marl, timber and fine farm lands. It has made many a settler independent and added to the wealth of manufacturers who have sought this territory. Opportunities have not passed, as there is still a generous supply of land which can be obtained at low figures and on easy terms.

She had gone to call upon a friend and upon returning found about thirty-five of her relatives in her home who most heartily greeted her. ## AVARICIOUS QUEEN.

Elizabeth of England Accused by Historians of Hoarding Public Funds.

The great Queen Elizabeth nearly wrecked England by her parsimony, and is, therefore, condemned by historians after historians for her "avarice." She probably had no avarice in her composition. She may have, probably had, inherited a trace of the rigid spirit of her grandfather, Henry VII., that able attorney on a throne, but she did not hoard money for herself, but for the state. The revenue in her time was small in proportion to the demands on it, she was convinced that it was her first duty to keep the treasury solvent, and, like any other sparing housewife, her notion of the method was to resist every demand, to cut down every supply, and to seek unpaid help from any individual whom she could suppose to be bound to render it. So she levied every penny to which she was entitled; she cut down incidents even for powder, as a housewife cuts down demands for gravy beef; and she required of her nobles and her courtiers expenditure from their own purses, which it had previously been their duty to make, but which it was their duty no longer. She acted, in fact, as treasury officials sometimes act now, from an inapplicable sense of duty; and not once or twice, but several times, she nearly paralyzed her administration. Frederick the Great did precisely the same thing from the same motive, and both king and queen in time of peace saved their people from great suffering and misfortune. They were successful, and were, therefore, forgiven, as treasury officials are now and will be always, until the unlucky day when the Armada approaches, and there is not powder enough to supply the existing fleet. It is vain to say the officials are perverse, and mean, or avaricious; they are simply doing their proper work without the imagination to see that, new conditions having arisen, they should do it in a different way.

THE WOMAN OF 30

Is the Queen of Her Sex, and Greatly to Be Desired.

"Give me a woman of 30," writes a member of the sex who has had much experience in the world, "and I will back her any day against a pretty, inexperienced debutante of 20. It is little feminine ways which appeal so irresistibly to a man's heart. These ways are the result of careful, tasteful practice, generally speaking, the result of knowledge of the world that can only come after one has lived among men and women, after one has loved and been loved! La jeune fille is to my mind most irritating and unattractive. She is so helplessly self-engrossed, so prejudiced; she has still to learn such a vast amount, when first launched into society (though, of course, a clever mother can help her simple ingenuities enormously). Girls are, as a rule, taken from school much too soon. They should be allowed to finish their education by traveling abroad for a couple of years before they mix on equal terms with other women who have seen so much more and know so much more than any insipid, uninformed child of 18 can possibly do. Oh, the stupidity of the average chaperon! No wonder they sit and watch their soulless daughters being cast into the shade by the smart married woman or the finished and desperately attractive, though still unmarried, siren of 30."

SNAKE, EGGS, JUG.

Story of an Incident that Happened in India.

A lady in Durban, India, on getting up one morning heard a most peculiar noise in the pantry. She was astonished to find that a snake had its head and part of its body through the handle of a china jug. Both sides of the snake—that is the portion on each side of the handle—were bulging out. Then she discerned what had happened. Some eggs had been lying on the shelf, and the snake, after having swallowed one, had crawled partly through the handle of the jug—that is as far as the swallowed egg would allow—in order to get at another, which it had also swallowed. Naturally enough, it could not then go either forward or backward through the handle. The lady was just going to call her husband when the reptile gave a desperate wriggle, and in doing so fell on the floor with a bang, handle and all. But the fall broke both the eggs in its inside, and taking advantage of its release from the handle it was out in the garden before you could say "Ware!"

PROTECTION FOR EVERY WOMAN IS FOUND IN Dr. PIERCE'S FAVORITE PRESCRIPTION

"I am the mother of four children," writes Mrs. Ruphemia Falconer, of Trent, Muskegon Co., Mich. "My first two babies were still-born, and I suffered every thing but death. My friends all thought I could never recover. I was reduced to 100 pounds. When I was three months along for my third child I was taken with hemorrhage or flooding and came near having a miscarriage from female weakness. For two months I was under the care of our doctor, but was getting weaker all the time until one day I happened to come across one of your little books and I read it through, and the next day I sent and got three bottles of 'Favorite Prescription' and one bottle of 'Pelle's'. I improved so fast I continued to take your medicine until baby was born, and he is healthy and all right. My weight has been good ever since. I now weigh 165 pounds."

UNCLE SAM'S CENSUS.

POPULATION OF THE UNITED STATES IS 76,295,220.

Increase in Ten Years Is Twenty-one Per Cent—Inhabitants of the Forty-five States Number 74,027,007—Indiana Not Taxed, 134,158.

The total population of the United States for 1900, as officially announced by Director Merriam for the federal census, is 76,295,220. The total gain in the population of the country, since 1880 amounts to 13,225,404, representing an increase of nearly 21 per cent. Of the total population for 1900 74,027,007 are in the forty-five States, which number represents the basis for the reapportionment of congressional districts. The total population of the census of 1880 was 62,801,603, comprising 62,822,200 persons in the States and organized territories. The statement just issued by the director of census gives the population of the country in detail by States and territories. Hawaii contains a population of 154,001, as compared with 80,000 in 1880, while the number of persons in the service of the United States stationed abroad is 84,000. There is a total of 164,158 Indians not taxed.

A remarkable decline in the growth of the intermountain and middle Western States is shown by the State returns. The northwestern and middle States reveal the healthiest growth, while the Southern and Eastern States compare unfavorably with the growth recorded in 1880. Nevada has fewer people within its borders now than in 1880. Then the population was 45,701, and now it is 42,334. Kansas has remained almost stationary. The latest census gives that State 3,400,400 inhabitants, against 3,427,000 in 1880. Nebraska likewise shows small signs of population growth. Colorado has made better progress, showing an increase of over 120,000 in ten years. Idaho has almost doubled its population. In the central States Illinois looms forth as the most progressive. Indiana has a population of 2,510,403, against 2,102,404 in 1880. Iowa increased from 1,011,800 to 2,251,520. Michigan shows a gain of 325,000, and Minnesota a gain of 450,000, while Missouri has also made a good stride with a gain of nearly half a million. Wisconsin has a gain of over 300,000.

Illinois' gain is considered most remarkable. In 1880 there were 8,320,351 persons in the Prairie State, which number has increased, according to the latest census, to 8,421,550. Illinois stands third in the list of States in point of population. New York State comes first with a grand total of 7,208,000, as against 6,007,853 ten years ago, while Pennsylvania is second with 6,301,395, against 5,258,014 in 1880. Following Illinois comes Ohio, with 4,157,545. Fifth place is accorded to Missouri, with 3,107,117 inhabitants, and Texas holds sixth place with 3,048,828.

Following is the official announcement of the population of the United States in 1900 by States, compared with the population of 1880, and showing the number of Indians not taxed:

ILLINOIS INCIDENTS.

SOBER OR STARTLING, FAITHFULLY RECORDED.

Burglars in Bridgeport Bank—Moore Convicted of Murder—Delicate Decision in Law Case—Statue to Panna Miner Unveiled—Two Men Killed.

Robbers blew open the safe at the Bank of Bridgeport, owned by Seed Brothers, secured $700 in cash, $1,000 worth of notes, other valuable papers and a large quantity of jewelry and watches from the general store in which the bank is located. They then defied the people of the town that had been attracted to the place and made their escape. The burglary occurred at 9:30 a. m. The robbers took from a blacksmith shop a large sledge hammer with which they broke the doors to the outer vault of the bank. They then applied some powerful explosive. Three discharges were necessary to force an entrance into the strong box. The powder was sufficient to blow the entire front out of the building. A number of men were attracted to the scene, but a fierce "stand back," accompanied with a pistol shot, was sufficient to drive the villagers to their homes for arms, the thieves getting away while they were gone.

Goes to Prison for Life.
Life imprisonment is the punishment fixed by the jury which tried George, alias Jack, Moore for the murder of John M. Snyder. Snyder was a young farmer from Indiana, had been working on a farm near Bloomington and was on his way to his home, carrying his earnings of the corn season with him. Thinking to save his railroad fare, he started to tramp it. At Mahomet he met Moore and together they started to walk to Champaign. Snyder was last seen alive by a track inspector near Rising. A few days later a farmer discovered what appeared to be the hand of a man protruding from a shock of corn on his farm, one mile from the Champaign city limits. The police were notified and an investigation disclosed the hidden body of Snyder. Moore was arrested at his home in Champaign a few days later and was taken to the Champaign County Jail Thanksgiving day, 1900.

Question Which Died First.
A novel case has been decided in a St. Clair County case. David S. Sage and wife were killed in a terrible storm that swept over the county four years ago. Their bodies were found lying side by side. They had one daughter, the only lineal heir. In a suit for a settlement of the estate the question arose as to which had died first. If Sage, then his wife's relatives would be entitled to her award, consisting of dower and homestead. If his wife died first, then her relatives would be entitled to nothing, but the whole estate, amounting to about $10,000, would fall to Miss Mabel Sage, the daughter. There was no way of proving which had died first, and the court held that since woman physically is weaker than man Mr. Sage must have died first, and upon this hypothesis awarded the estate to the daughter.

Miners Unveil a Statue.
In commemoration of the death of Xavier Leech, who was killed in Panna during the memorable coal miners' strike riots of April 10, 1900, when so many people were either slain or injured, a statue, which had been erected by the coal miners, was unveiled there. A procession headed by the Taylorville military band and the Panna fire department marched to the Mount cemetery, where the ceremonies took place. Delegations were present from all the surrounding coal mine towns. State Secretary W. D. Ryan and Edward Cahill of Springfield were present. Addresses were made by Rev. Father Weigand and Rev. B. M. Southgate of Panna and Rev. Father Hefernan of Shelbyville.

Accidentally Killed a Companion.
George Mulcaster, aged 17, was shot and killed by Arthur Anderson, aged 16, by the accidental discharge of a gun while the boys were out hunting. Anderson was attempting to climb over a fence with his gun cocked when it caught and was discharged, killing Mulcaster, who was fifteen feet in front. Both boys resided at Murphysboro.

Found Dead by Track Side.
Loren Lewis, son of a leading merchant of Alto Pass, and George Corgan were found dead by the side of the tracks of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad about three miles north of Pomona. The young men had spent the day at the Republican rally at Murphysboro and had started to walk home. It is thought that they became tired and while resting on the tracks were run down by a train. The play is suspected by others. The young men were not addicted to drink.

State Items of Interest.
Thomas Simpson and Mrs. Mary E. Mooneyhan, aged 81 and 67, respectively, were married at Eldorado.

Frank Puckett, an M. & O. brakeman, was found dead in bed at Murphysboro, having ended his life by taking carbolic acid.

Thomas Jasper, a Chicago and Alton brakeman, was fatally injured near Drummond by falling beneath the wheels of a train.

The Supreme Court has denied the petition of Henry Hutchinson for a writ of habeas corpus. Hutchinson was convicted in Chicago in 1893 of the murder of Florence Burt and was sentenced to life imprisonment in Joliet penitentiary. He based his claim for release on the ground that neither the judgment nor the indictment specified the crime of which he was convicted. The defense argued that if the judgment was faulty relief could come only through a writ of error.

Mrs. William Hilger of Hoot, pole, a bride of six months, has confessed to murdering her husband in cold blood. Hilger lived long enough after he was shot to tell the story of the crime. He was first shot through the temple while lying asleep. He sprang to his feet and his wife shot him through the neck and twice in the abdomen. He then wrested the revolver from her and fired the remaining shot into the woodbox. The wounded man writhed on the floor for an hour and implored his wife to go for a surgeon, but she refused to do so. She waited until she thought he was dead and then went to a neighbor's and said her husband had shot himself. Her aim was to get the insurance of $3,000 on her husband's life.

The new court house which is to take the place of the one destroyed at Bloomington in the $2,000,000 fire June 10 will be begun in a few weeks and completed by Jan. 1, 1902. The contract for the building is $305,000. The heating plant, which will be in a separate building several blocks from the court house, will cost $40,000. This, with the furnishings, will bring the total cost up to $400,000. The foundation of the court house and first course above ground will be granite. The first story will be of bluish Bedford oolitic stone; the rest of the building will be buff Bedford. The building will in all respects be fireproof. The interior is white marble and the metal work solid bronze. A passenger elevator runs from the basement to the third floor.

Inflamed by their losses, a party of sporting men precipitated a riot on the main thoroughfare of Brocton, and Jos. Nugent, marshal of the village, was seriously injured in an effort to quell the disturbance. A quarter-mile running race was pulled off between Gray, a local horse never before defeated, and The Belle, a mare owned by Terre Haute parties. The race was for $1,000 a side, and the Brocton horse was heavily backed by Maucell Bolan, a saloonkeeper, his brothers and local talent. The Belle came in under the wire a handy winner by sixty feet. Hot disputes followed, which Nugent tried to quell. He was shot in the foot, gashed in three places and trodden under foot. A posse of citizens fought back the contending factions and rescued the officer in an unconscious condition.

J. C. Klaholt, a leading Springfield jeweler, was recently the victim of a clever confidence game which has just been made public. A few days ago the jeweler was called up by telephone and informed that Mrs. John R. Tanner was at the other end of the wire. The alleged Mrs. Tanner informed him that her maid was about to be married and that Mrs. Tanner wished to present her with a suitable present in the shape of a gold watch. She said the girl would come to the store presently and she asked Mr. Klaholt please to see that she was supplied according to her taste and send the bill. Mr. Klaholt was only too glad to do so and the "maid" soon appeared and selected a watch. When the jeweler wrote a note thanking Mrs. Tanner for her patronage there were explanations in which it came out that Mrs. Tanner's maid had neither a new gold watch nor matrimonial intentions.

In a collision on the Chicago and Alton near Mitchell one man was killed and six others were injured. George W. Corson, mail clerk, Bloomington, is dead. The injured: Sidney L. Webster, engineer, Bloomington, arms and legs broken and injured internally; George Perittage, fireman, Bloomington, arm broken; William Stewart, mail clerk, Chicago; J. W. Himes, mail clerk, Bloomington; R. P. Himes, mail clerk, Normal. The collision occurred between passenger train No. 8, known as the midnight special, bound from Chicago to St. Louis, and a freight train on a long curve near Mitchell. Webster and his fireman jumped, as did also the engineer and fireman of the freight train. The first car behind the engine of the passenger train was the mail car, in which several clerks were asleep. The engine of the freight crashed through the front of the mail car, telescoping it and injuring a number of the clerks.

Drangeline J. Lyons, charged with smuggling diamonds from France by forcing a poodle dog to swallow them, has been arrested at Star Lake, Wis. She says she lives in Chicago.

Fred Kreiger, a diamond thief, stole a horse and buggy from the farm of Z. N. Elliott, near Mattoon, and sold it for $300. He had hardly completed the deal when a posse rode up, and the man only made his escape by hearing a fast-moving train amid a volley of shots.

Joseph W. Day and Miss Emma Boon, both of Delmar, eloped to Pekin and were married by Rev. Mr. Alsip, pastor of the Christian Church. For two years they have been trying to marry, but such was the opposition and so closely was the young woman watched that this was impossible.

BAZZAZA, THE INGENUOUS STAGE ELEPHANT.

One of the most ingenious property animals ever seen on the New York stage is Bazzaza, billed as the sacred white elephant in "A Million Dollars." It appears in the story of the play that Bazzaza is hundreds of years old, but early in life contracted the bad habit of stealing horns of rum to slake his thirst, and, in consequence, never grew beyond the proportions of a baby elephant, so as a property he stands less than six feet in height. From "forehead to stern" in the parlance of the circus man, he measures about five feet.

A frame of the lightest bamboo is covered with muslin, while the head is built of plaster of paris, making a total weight of less than thirty pounds. The trunk is a piece of muslin with an extremely clever arrangement of cables and springs, so that it has as much freedom of action as the trunk of any elephant in the Zoo.

This and the ears, which flap as in life, are operated by the man who is representing the forelegs, while a second man in the rear represents the hind legs and works the glass eyes, metal eyelids and the tail. It takes more than a second glance to determine that one is looking at a property instead of a real elephant.

JUST LIKE TWO PEAS.

American Actress and Irish Marchioness Like Twins.

It is not often that two persons not related by ties of consanguinity are remarkable for their resemblance to each other, yet there are occasionally such phenomena. On a recent visit to London Miss Julia Marlowe, the American actress, had the pleasure of meeting her double in the person of the marchioness of Downshire, an Irish lady of quality. Feature for feature the two were exact counterparts of each other, and a stranger to both, meeting them together, would avow they were twin sisters. It is needless to say that both are charming women. They are alike in height, weight and coloring.

Miss Marlowe is justly considered one of the handsomest women on the American stage, while the marchioness of Downshire is looked upon as one of the most charming members of the Irish nobility, and what is even more to her credit, she is a peculiarly sweet and accomplished woman. Before her marriage she was Miss Hare, granddaughter of the earl of Listowel, and by her marriage to the eighth earl of Downshire, the Irish beauty, whose pulchritude in a single season had won her widespread fame, became one of the richest Irish peeresses, second only to her sister, marchioness of Londonderry. Like a genuine daughter of the Emerald Isle, this wealthy and titled woman prefers her Irish homes to those her husband owns in England, and, true to the traditions of her family, she is a wonderful horsewoman. Her little 5-year-old son, Viscount Hillsborough, has been taught to master his pony under her own eye, hand and direction. Coming herself from Irish people, one of the marchioness' proudest boasts is that her husband's family settled in Ireland as long ago as 1573, and that her boys will grow up to be genuine Irishmen. Now and then she leaves her favorite home in County Down for a glimpse of the London season, and she is not alone conspicuous in the Mayfair drawing-rooms for her beauty, but also for the fact that she rarely or never wears any jewels. With a wealth of rich hair and faultless throat and arms, this beautiful woman creates a more flattering impression without the commonplace pearls, diamonds, etc., that her sister peeresses find absolutely necessary to their pride and good looks.

SOME FAMOUS VIOLINISTS.

In the fourth and last installment of "Memories of a Musical Life," in the Century, Dr. William Mason gives his recollections of Raff, Rubenstein, Von Bulow, and Paderewski, Theodore Thomas at twenty, and some of the most famous violinists of the century.

I have already mentioned in these papers my meeting with Joachim in Leipzig in the year 1840. He was then about eighteen years of age and already famous as a violinist. He was of medium height, had broad, open features, and a heavy shock of dark hair somewhat like that of Rubenstein. I had a letter of introduction to him, which I presented a short time after my arrival in Leipzig, and received immediately a return call from him. He was kind and affable, and easy to become acquainted with, but owing to diffidence on my part I did not improve the opportunity as I should have done, a circumstance which I now much regret. He played the Mendelssohn concerto in one of the Gewandhaus concerts within a month of my arrival at Leipzig, and I heard him then for the first time, and was much impressed by his beautiful performance. Subsequently, when in Weimar, I had the pleasure of meeting him on many occasions, for he was in the habit of going there not infrequently, and would sometimes take part in the Altenburg private musicales, as well as in the public concerts at the theater.

During the year 1845-46 I heard and became well acquainted with three famous violinists, Vieltumps, Ole Bull and Sivori, who came to Boston and played many times both in public and private. They were all great players, each having his special individuality. Vieltumps and Ole Bull met several times in later years, and became familiar with their playing. Vieltumps came to Weimar and played both in private and in public. His playing was wonderfully precise and accurate, every tone receiving due attention, and his phrasing was delightful. Scale and arpeggio passages were absolutely clean and without a flaw. He was certainly a player of exquisite taste, and he still preserved his characteristics when I heard him years later, in 1853, at Weimar, and in 1873 at New York. Ole Bull came to Boston a year or so after Vieltumps. He was a born violinist, and developed after his own fashion and nature, in the manner of a genius. Vieltumps was the result of a scientific training and close adherence to well-founded principles. Ole Bull, on the other hand, was a law unto himself, and burst out into full blossom without showing the various degrees of growth. He did not realize the importance of close attention to detail while in the course of development.

WILD MAN ON A MOUNTAIN.

Our New Island of Tutuila Has a Genuine Human Curiosity.

In a letter from Olvill Engineer E. R. Gaylor to his family in St. Louis, dated Pago Pago, Island of Tutuila, the following incident is related:

"Here is a sensation—a real, genuine wild man. Twelve years ago three Solomon Islanders (cannibals), who were brought to Upolu to work on the German plantations at Vallee, escaped from Upolu, built a rude raft of logs and drifted by wind and wave over the seventy miles of unknown sea to Tutuila. Here they lived for a time in a mountain retreat. One was shortly afterward killed by the Samoans, and some time after this happened the remaining two parted company and never again met.

"A week ago a mountain side, overlooking Laulu, in an almost inaccessible fastness, a wandering Samoan found a banana patch, a small taro field and a rude hut, and caught a glimpse of a man as he disappeared up the mountain side.

"A party was organized which destroyed the plants and fired the hut. Yesterday a naked man, armed with a bow and arrow, tall, slender, long-haired and blacker than your wildest fancy could paint him, stalked into Ann and pointed to his mouth, demanding food. They brought him over to Pago Toga the principal town on the Bay of Pago Pago. His face, arms and body were finely tattooed in black lines, which could hardly be seen against his ebony skin. He stood head and shoulders above the Samoans and white men, who regarded him with the greatest respect. He is accused of slaying several Samoans who have disappeared in late years."

To "Manage" the Train.
As a rule English women raise their skirts awkwardly, French women gracefully and American women daintily. The mode in Paris of holding up the skirt, which has also been adopted by the "smart" women of England, is to gather up the superfluous folds in the left hand and to raise the hand to the left hip and there rest it.

The man who wins his wife's forgiveness by buying her a wool dress, has to make it a silk upon his next offense.

PAY CLERK IS MURDERED.

Attempt by Highwaymen to Secure Cash Ends in Bloody Battle.

As a result of an attempt of four Italian or Russian highwaymen, armed with revolvers and dynamite, to steal $5,000 Tuesday afternoon, Paymaster W. H. Hosier of the Southwest Connelville (Pa.) Coke Company, and two would-be highwaymen are dead, another robber is fatally injured, and another was wounded, but not seriously.

Paymaster Hosier and a colored servant named Harry Burgess left the Citizens' Bank in a light spring wagon drawn by two horses. They had $5,000 in a small safe with which the men at Alverton were to be paid. Near Mount Pleasant two men, who were walking just ahead of them, grabbed the bridle of the two horses. As Mr. Hosier sprang to his feet pistol shots rang out from the rear, and the paymaster sank back dead.

Hosier's assistant never hesitated. He whipped out a big revolver and fired at one of the men at the horses' heads. The man sank down in the road. Burgess, without looking to see the result of his shot, wheeled on the men in the rear. Two revolvers were on a level with him, but before either of them could fire Burgess dropped on his knees in the seat of the wagon, shooting as he knelt. A second robber fell forward. The remaining two hastily dashed into the woods.

A crowd of 3,000 men, armed with guns, tracked two of the robbers to a dense thicket, where one of them was shot to death. The other surrendered and but for the interference of officers he would have been torn limb from limb.

LORD SALISBURY STEPS OUT.

Premier Resigns His Post of Minister of Foreign Affairs.

The London Telegraph makes a spend on an announcement that Lord Salisbury has decided to resign his post of minister of foreign affairs, but to retain the premiership. His health, the paper says, causes no anxiety, but trusted physicians urge him to do less work. Lord Lansdowne, at present secretary of state for war, will, the Telegraph declares, succeed Lord Salisbury as foreign minister. The London Times confirms the statement of the Daily Telegraph that Lord Salisbury will give up the foreign office portfolio, but it does not name his successor.

Lord Salisbury looks back upon a political career of nearly half a century. In 1853, when only 23 years of age, he was elected a member of Parliament for Exeter, and he represented this borough for fifteen years. He took an active part in all public measures which affected the interests of the established church and the chief political questions of the day.

NEWS FROM OUR COLONIES.

The civilian clerks in some of the supply departments at Manila are beginning to kick because they are not getting enough pay. They work side by side with enlisted men detailed as clerks, who only get $10.50 a month instead of $100 or more, which is the pay of the clerks. The curious thing about it is that the soldiers would go out in the field and hike about in constant danger of being shot, with never a kick about their pay, but as soon as they are settled down in a comfortable billet in town, with no danger of any sort to furnish them with excitement, they want just as much pay as the civilian who does the same work no better than they.

American occupation is showing one of its favorite characteristics in Negros, where a capital fight is slowly but surely developing between Bacolod and some town as yet unnamed. The Island Council is finding that there are not sufficient public buildings in Bacolod to accommodate the department offices, and besides it is too far from the sea, and too difficult of access. The council has voted $10,000 for the repair of bridges, and has appointed a committee of three to inspect all schools, public and private, in the island. Also the council has voted $10,000 annually for the purchase of material of instruction.

The authorities at Washington are seriously considering the adoption of some measures designed to break up the combines said to be responsible for the greatly increased cost of living in Manila. Practical necessities of life have been doubled since the American occupation, entailing great hardships on the natives, and seriously retarding American progress in the city. Any relief the government can afford will be heartily welcomed, for the exactions of merchants have become almost unbearable.

One of the American papers in Manila is agitating the leper question and advocating the selection of one of the numerous islands of the group as a place where they may be secluded.

The recent mutiny on the Escano and the massacre of the officers of the ship, coupled with the similar occurrences on the Campana de Filipinas in 1898, have stirred up the ship owners, and several firms have decided to send no more ships to sea without sufficient Europeans on board to be able to handle any outbreak among the crews.

The Red Men have organized a Manila branch, and now the Masons are about to erect a lodge under dispensation from California.

THREW HER MONEY AWAY.

Count Castellane Dived Deep Into the Fortune of His Wife.

The news that the Gould family has at last been compelled to step in and save what is left of the millions willed to Anna Gould, who five years ago married Count Castellane, has created little surprise in this country, but has occasioned a lot of talk. "Thies of extravagance" have been coming over the water ever since the marriage. The count expended the fortune of his wife with a recklessness that astonished even Paris.

Thine cable, in telling of the appointment of George J. Gould as trustee of his sister's money and property, says the order was given upon the request of the Gould family and with the consent of the countess. When it became apparent that something must be done quickly, the Gould family held a council and unanimously decided that, in the interest of the countess and her children, a judicial trustee must be appointed, and George was selected to take the matter in charge.

Accordingly application was made, and Mr. Bonnet appeared in court for the countess. He stated that "the countess herself admits the fact that she has indulged in extravagant expenditure, and is in need of having an authoritative adviser to supply the experience in which she is lacking. She consents to the appointment of a judicial trustee." Maitre Badouin, who presided over the court, immediately upon hearing this statement, appointed George J. Gould trustee.

Maitre Bonnet, acting for the Goulds, stated that the Gould family had prayed the elder brother, George, to save their sister, Anna, and her children, from ruin. He stated that Castellane himself was absolutely penniless. Under his guidance the countess had spent $3,000,000 in the first four years, $300,000 more than her income for that period, besides having contracted debts to the amount of nearly $4,500,000.

Count Castellane does not take kindly to the restraint on his expenditures. The count will have to go to his American brother-in-law for his pocket money, and he will have to render account to Gould for the money he spends. It is rumored that the Goulds favor a separation.

The most notable event in European politics during the week has been the reorganization of the English ministry. There have been numerous changes, and Lord Salisbury has succeeded in pleasing neither his own party nor the opposition. Political considerations seem to have given way to social preference and personal favoritism. There was popular demand for the retirement of Lord Lansdowne, whose marked ineptness in the conduct of the war office nearly resulted in the break-down of the British army system in the recent war. Lord Salisbury answers this demand by promoting Lansdowne to a higher post and by placing one of his own subordinates—almost, it might be said, one of his own clerks—at the head of the war department. There has been an equally determined campaign against Mr. Goschen as first lord of the admiralty. Lord Salisbury lets Mr. Goschen go and installs his own son-in-law in the place. Joseph Chamberlain is retained at the head of the colonial office, and the opposition is mollified only by the consolation that his pathway to the premiership has been blocked, if only temporarily. The cabinet, as reconstructed, cannot be called a strong one.

The Spanish government during the week has been called upon to deal with what at first seemed to be a formidable revolt of the numerous Carlist bands in the mountain districts north of Barcelona. Troops have been sent into the field, garrisons re-enforced and the frontier guarded to prevent the importation of arms. The rising, however, seems to be local in its character, and there is nothing yet to indicate that Don Carlos himself has given any countenance to it. There will always be discontent in Spain under the present system of government. The Spanish revenues, large as they are, are eaten up by place holders. The people are poverty stricken and unruly under heavy burdens of taxation. The discontent of the people is only kept in check by a large army, and the army is on a most expensive footing.

The Chinese affair seems to be drifting. Few dispatches come from Peking, and these give little indication of any progress toward a settlement between China and the powers. The alignment of the powers is now complete. Great Britain, Germany, Austria, Italy and Japan universally accept the entire Anglo-German agreement. The United States, France and Russia accept only part of the agreement. Yet the seeming lack of accord is more apparent than real, and there seems to be nothing to prevent active negotiations for a settlement. As to the demands to be made upon China by the powers, there is a singular lack of information. Either the powers have not yet reached an agreement among themselves or their demands are so great that they hesitate to unite them all in one proposition.

Early in the week a rumor was given circulation that Germany was negotiating with Venezuela for the lease of the island of Margarita, to be used as a coaling station. A fanfare of trumpets was speedily heard from the Washington agency of several American newspapers and the Monroe doctrine held up as a warning signal. The rumor was, however, officially denied by the German foreign office and the incident closed.

of them as could be piled into a wagon, visited with Mr. and Mrs. Frank Tourtelotte, of Pleasant Prairie, over Sunday. The rest of the little Burke's we parceled out to numerous friends to care for until our return, and, barring the expense of hiring a rig, it's a great scheme and our friends, if we have any, within walking distance, need not be surprised if they see us walking in and taking possession of the entire ranch for a week or two.

P. S. Since writing the foregoing we have had the promise of some potatoes on subscription; we'll feast a little longer on promises, and then start out after some delinquents with a gun.

Talk about McKinley prosperity, on Sunday last, November 4, Mr. and Mrs.
George Grice and family dined at the Toby Inn at Lake Marie, part of the menu consisted of new string beans and new onions, gathered in the open garden that day, while the table decorations consisted of sweet peas, also gathered in the open garden. Mr.
Tobiason might truthfully advertise a winter resort with flowers in bloom and new garden vegetables.

A very pleasant and happy home wedding occurred at the home of Mrs.
J. L. Harden, Wednesday evening, November 7, 1900, the occasion being the marriage of her eldest daughter, Florence E. to Howard E. Riggs, in the presence of the immediate family and fully one hundred invited guests.
Rev. E. J. Aikin, of the M. E. Church, officiating. The bride was attired in white silk and carried a bunch of white roses and looked as pure and sweet as the flowers. After the short but impressive marriage ceremony the happy bride and groom were most heartily congratulated by all present and repaired to the dining room where an elegant bridal supper was served after which the bridal party took the nine o'clock train for Chicago and will make a short visit with friends of the groom in Ohio, before settling down in their home at Lafayette, Indiana.
The wedding presents were numerous and beautiful, consisting of sterling silverware, cut glass, linen etc. attesting the high esteem in which the bride is held by those who have known her from her infancy. The groom is a comparative stranger to most of our people, but is held in the highest esteem by those who have the pleasure of knowing him, and that himself and his bonny bride may live a long and happy life, is the sincere wish of The News, to which all will add a fervent amen.

MOURNING GOWNS.

The Making of These Creations is a Study by Itself.

The making of a mourning gown is a study by itself, and the result of going to a dressmaker who does not understand the art is a garment of ugliness unsurpassed. Only the most experienced can manipulate sombre stuffs into interesting gowns. If one has to be made and worn it may just as well be becomingly constructed. To be sure, the variety of materials is greater than ever before, and the fact that the beautiful English crepes are now waterproofed greatly enlarges the sphere of work. This waterproofing of crepe is a boon to women who cannot afford to spend large sums on their mourning. Crepe which has not passed through this process becomes shabby all too soon, and has to be replaced.
It is now possible to have the entire costume, including the jacket of this costly frill material, and to feel that one is not extravagant, for although the price is not low, the garments made from it are not injured by dampness, and wear as well as if of some sterner fabric. If the entire gown is of crepe, the lining must be of black taffeta, and this lining of the skirt must not be detached—when the costume is partly of crepe and partly of woolen material, such as Endora cloth, Melrose cloth or drap d'Alma, the crepe is always used for the loop of the waist, that is, it forms a yoke, or gumpe, or bolero. The sleeves are also of this material, or trimmed with it, while the skirt has a deep applied flounce en forme or bands. Sometimes these bands are embroidered with ruffles of mousseline de sole.
French mourning permits many departures from the sombreness of entire black. Jackets and capes may be lined with white satin and skirts with white taffeta. A beautiful imported house gown of recent date was of white crepe de chine, over which was worn a long blouse of black mousseline de sole plaited and mounted upon a yoke embroidered in black silk.

Annual Fire Insurance Assessment.

The directors of the Millburn Mutual Insurance Company have levied on all members an assessment for 1900 of five dollars ($5.00) on each one thousand dollars insured to pay losses amounting to $11-934.90 that have occurred during the year.
Said assessment will be due and called for thirty days after date. Please be prompt in paying assessment to treasurer.

Millburn, Nov. 3, 1900. 10w2

Brave Explorers

Like Stanley and Livingstone, found it harder to overcome Malaria, Fever and Ague, and Typhoid disease germs than savages cannibals; but thousands have found that Electric Bitters is a wonderful cure for all malarial diseases. If you have chills with fever, aches in the back of neck and head, and tired, worn-out feeling, a trial will convince you of their merit. W. A.
Nail, of Webb, Ill., writes: "My children suffered for more than a year with chills and fever; then two bottles of Electric Bitters cured them." Only 50c. Try them.
Guaranteed. Sold by druggists.

Lawyer's Sally Outwits Court.

A joke was once perpetrated in the supreme court when Thomas Wilson of Washington was arguing. Mr. Wilson was arguing a case of some importance. He was dwelling upon propositions that were known to and accepted by every law student in the country when he was interrupted by the late Justice Miller, saying: "Can not the counsel safely assume that this court understands the rudiments of law?" "I made that mistake in the lower court," reported Mr. Wilson, "or this case would not have been here on appeal."—Chicago Record.

Could Spare Him First.

St. Louis would not like to see her population of 575,278 reduced to 575, 277; but if any one must move away from St. Louis let us hope it will be the man who groveled on his stomach in front of his gate, pretending he had taken poison, in order to scare his bride of a week into hysterics.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Many people worry because they believe they have heart disease. The chances are that their hearts are all right but their stomachs are unable to digest food. Kodol Dyspepsia Cure digests what you eat and prevents the formation of gas which makes the stomach press against the heart. It will cure every form of indigestion. W. T.
Hill.
